Incite safety in the New River Valley by supporting Healthy Relationships Week at Floyd County High School

(Radford, VA) –From January 23-27, community members in Floyd County can positively impact the lives of Floyd teens by working together to create a community free of sexual and domestic violence.

Each year, the Women's Resource Center of the New River Valley (WRC), implements a Healthy Relationships Week at Floyd High School. By working together with representatives from the WRC, Floyd County Public Schools, and other community members, the team plans a week of activities to promote building relationships grounded in respect, equality, honesty, communication, and trust.

Community members can partner with the WRC providing prizes for the students, hosting awareness presentations in the community, placing ribbons or declarations in their offices, or distributing topical inserts in their church bulletin or business.

"We are thankful for a community that comes together to incite safety," said Pat Brown, Executive Director. "Because of the compassionate, dedicated people of Floyd, the WRC has the ability to make a difference in the lives and futures of many teens."

The Women's Resource Center (WRC) is a non-profit human service agency, serving Floyd County, Giles County, Montgomery County, Pulaski County, and the City of Radford. The WRC has changed the lives of many community members by providing programs and services to adult and child victims of sexual and domestic violence. For almost forty years, the WRC has been providing hope and help to those who need it, making it the oldest domestic violence center in Virginia.
